Insurances.

THE NEGLECT OF LIFE ASSURANCE.

THERE is no feature of our civilised life that strikes a thoughtful man with more force than the neglect of LIFE ASSURANCE. By payment of a small quarterly subscription any man of good health can secure a very large sum to his family in case of premature death, yet hundreds of families brought up in comfort—perhaps in luxury—are left in extreme poverty every year from the bread winner having neglected to assure his life. In the East many a man lives up to his income, knowing well that if death cut him off suddenly, his wife and children would be left almost wholly unprovided for. All this can be prevented by Life Assurance.

EVERY FACILITY.

In connection with Life Assurance Business is offered by THE STANDARD LIFE OFFICE, one of the largest and wealthiest of the Provident Institutions of the United Kingdom. Forms of application and all information will be promptly afforded on application to any of the Standard Company's Agents, or to

CORRESPONDENCE.

[We do not necessarily endorse the opinions expressed by Correspondents in this column.]

IRISHMEN AS SAILORS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "HONGKONG TELEGRAPH."
I have lived a good many years in the world and have had a long experience of Irishmen as sailors before I gathered from your excellent newspaper that they were less reliable men than others who earn a living at sea. As a rule I prefer them to any other men except Hindoos or Chinamen, indeed I may say I have generally had less trouble with Irish seamen than with Englishmen or Scotchmen. The English I have generally found too fond of making trouble about their provisions, and as for the Scotch they are all right when sober but just a little too fond of their national beverage to suit my fancy. Trusting to have this matter explained, I enclose my card and sign myself
Your obedient servant,
IRISHMAN.

Hongkong, July 5th, 1888.

[Our correspondent's letter doubtless has reference to some remarks we made about Irish seamen in connection with the Childwall case, but as to the explanation he asks for we are not quite clear what it is he wishes to have explained—whether he wants to know why Scotch sailors "are too fond of whiskey," why English sailors "are prone to grumble" about their provisions, or why Irish sailors should be excused by all shipmasters who are fitting out for a long over-sea voyage. Assuming the last to be his objective point we will say, as far as time and space will permit us, that what we said on that head was the expression of a deliberate opinion founded long experience and strengthened by general report from the most reliable sources. We do not cast any doubt on our correspondent's experiences, and are exceedingly pleased to hear that he has found, and can prove, the exception to what we regard as an absolute rule. If we had said that the Tipperary peasantry were the most polite and courteous peasantry in Europe we should also simply have expressed our convictions, without any idea of drawing race distinctions. We repeat, however, that our correspondent's countrymen are not steady enough as sailors, and that on board such ships as we have specified they are as great a mistake as Frenchmen in the position of colonists or Scotchmen playing the part of courtiers. It is somewhat late in the century to have to explain that in all races of men there are special characteristics, and strong national traits of character in all people. The stolid Dutchman, for example, or the phlegmatic German, is a vastly different personage to the volatile Frenchman or the mercurial Italian. Such differences exist between the Englishman of Saxon blood and the Irishman of Milesian descent, differences which show themselves daily in the various avenues of life and which account for the fact, in some measure, that as the Scottish and English peasantry, including the Welsh, are the most awkward and ungainly, so the Tipperary agriculturists are the most polite and most obliging. There is, however, a want of stolidity in the Irish character, which makes her people unsuitable for the dull and plodding business of sea life, as formulated in the long-voyage ship, just as there exists a mental kink in the composition of an Englishman which unfits him for the happy life of a policeman in Hongkong.—Ed., Hongkong Telegraph.]

CHINESE CHARACTERISTICS.

SOCIAL TYPHOONS.

Occidental curses are sometimes not loud, but deep, but Chinese maledictions are nothing if not loud. An English oath is a winged bullet, Chinese abuse is a ball of fire. This abusive language is regarded as a sort of spell or curse. A man who has had the heads removed from his field of millet, stands at the entrance of the alley which leads to his dwelling, and pours volleys of abuse upon the unknown (though often not unsuspected) offender. This proceeding is regarded as having a double value, first as a means of notifying the public of his loss and of his consequent fury, thus freeing his mind and second as a protective magic, tending to secure him against the repetition of the offence. The culprit is (theoretically) in ambush, listening with something like awe to the frightful imprecations levelled at him. He cannot, of course, be sure that he is not detected, which is often the case. Perhaps the loser knows perfectly well who it was who stole his goods, but contents himself with a public reviling, as a formal notice that the culprit is either known or suspected, and will do well to avoid the repetition of his act. If provoked too far, the thief will, if thus tacitly proclaimed, retaliate. This is the Chinese theory of public reviling. They frankly admit that it is not only does not stop theft, but that it has no necessary tendency to prevent its repetition, since, among a large population, the thief, or other offender, is by no means certain to know that he has been reviled. The practice of "reviling the street," is often indulged in by women, who mount the flat roof of the house, and shriek away for hours at a time, or until their voice falls. A respectable family would not allow such a performance if they could prevent it, but in China as elsewhere, an enraged woman is a being difficult to restrain. Abuse delivered in this way, on general principle, attracts little or no attention, and one sometimes comes upon a man at the head of an alley, or a woman on the roof, screaming themselves red in the face, with not a single auditor in sight. If the day is a hot one, the reviler bawls as long as he (or she) has breath, then proceeds to refresh himself by a season of fanning, and afterwards returns to the attack with renewed fury.

If a Chinese quarrel be at all violent, it is next to impossible that it should be concluded without more or less personal vilification. English travellers in the south of Europe have noted the astonishment of the Latin races, at the invariable habit of the inhabitant of the British Isles, to strike out from the shoulder if he gets into a fight. The Chinese, like the Italians, have seldom learned to box, or if they have learned, it is not scientific boxing. The first and chief resource of Chinese when matters come to extremities, is to seize the queue of their opponent, endeavouring to pull out as much hair as possible. In nine fights out of ten, where only two parties are concerned, and where neither party can lay hold of any weapon, the "fight" resolves itself simply into a hair-pulling match. But before this has gone the length of producing anything like baldness, there are sure to be third parties intervening, who seize each of the combatants, and forcibly separate them, dragging them away, reviling as they go, each shouting back his maledictions and defiance, and apparently making the most violent efforts to free himself in which however, he is generally very careful not to succeed. To strike the person who is holding him in check never seems to occur to a Chinese, nor does he either express or feel that resentment which, to an Anglo-Saxon under the same circumstances, would be inevitable.

If the reader desires to examine an account (evidently photographically accurate) of the Oriental performance which the Chinese call tsu ch'iu or "making an uproar," let him turn to the XXXI chapter of the book of Genesis.

Jacob had been working for Laban for a great length of time, and had accumulated a great many cattle, and had married Laban's two daughters. But as the relations between the two uncle and nephew were frequently strained, Jacob thought it a shrewd piece of policy for him to start off, at a time when Laban was away from home, taking with him his wives and his flocks. It was three days before Laban, who was busy with his sheep shearing, heard that Jacob had left, and it was another week before Laban could overtake him. When he did, he was doubly irritated by the fact that in addition to his other offences, Jacob was supposed to have stolen Laban's gods. With a truly Oriental indignation at being called a thief, Jacob challenged Laban to search his camp, promising that whoever has the gods is to die, but the cunning Rachel took good care to sit on the images, and thus saved her husband's "face," and her own life. So Laban "found them not." By this time, Jacob was very angry, (verse 36), and "chode with Laban." The utterances of Jacob, of his wives and of Laban, were certainly not made continuously, as the form of the narrative would lead one to suppose, but merely the substance of the arguments on each side, spoken whenever the speaker could get a hearing. Before Jacob had got half through the second of the seven verses (36-4) assigned to his indignant speech, Laban had burst in with the taunt of verse 43, "Everything that you have is really mine, your wives are my daughters, and these sheep my flocks, you came to me empty-handed, you are nobody except through me." All these remarks were offered, notwithstanding the fact, stated by Laban himself to Jacob, that he had been warned in a vision, "speak not to Jacob either good or bad." By the time Jacob had begun to vociferate his reply to Laban, his wives Leah and Rachel (notwithstanding the late temporary disability of the latter) rushed out of their tents, with hair dishevelled and resembling a pair of ragged palm fronds, screaming at the top of their voices. The substance of their objections is given in verses 14 to 16: "We have nothing to do with him—he has sold us—he has cheated us—he wants to take away what God has given us—through our husband—he has searched us—he has disgraced us." &c., &c. Such a domestic typhoon would seem to be ruinous, such a quarrel impossible of adjustment. Far from it. The parties are Orientals, and not Anglo-Saxons. After having thoroughly fired their minds on every aspect of the subject, they gradually begin to grow more cool. Either through the "peace-talking" of the head retainers or without them, they begin to discourse reason (shuo li). "Come, come, (verse 41), let us be reasonable; let us compromise matters. Take your cattle and your flocks—he kind to my girls do not marry any more of other people's girls—let us pile up a great heap of stones for a witness." With this understanding, and the inevitable meal (verse 54) which must mark the adjustment of all Oriental disputes, the curtain drops, and each party goes its way.—N. Y. Daily News.

SEAMEN'S WAGES.

Mr. Chas. T. Russell, United States Consul at Liverpool, has compiled most interesting tables showing the wages and cost of maintenance of merchant seamen of the chief maritime nations. They will be found elsewhere in this issue. The information thus collected is most valuable.

SEAMEN'S WAGES.

The following tables were compiled by Mr. Charles T. Russell, United States Consul at Liverpool and transmitted to the Department of State.

coming as it does at a time when facts about shipping are wanted and not simply bald statements with no evidence to support them. The tables will, we have no doubt, be welcomed by subsidy advocates as showing the value of their plan for helping merchant shipping. They will, however, be unable to extract that great comfort from them, which they may at first expect.

The tables show that vessels of the United States pay more for wages and maintenance of their seamen than those of any other nation. This fact is generally known, and has been put forward as one reason for the decline of American shipping. Even after allowing for the rates of wages for all vessels being about the same in neutral ports, the American is accustomed to pay the most in the end. Norway and Sweden, Russia, Germany and Denmark pay about the same rate for their men and average about 47 to 50 per cent. lower in wages than do the United States. The comparison between the latter country and England does not show so great a difference, it being in the case of seamen 32 per cent. in favor of England. Officers, cooks and stewards of vessels are invariably much better paid than those of other vessels. Cooks and stewards are particularly favored, showing that these most important individuals are more appreciated by Americans than by people who pretend to higher culinary skill. Spain apparently comes next to the United States in the wages of seamen, and the smallness of her merchant marine will probably by many be attributed to this cause.

The cost of maintenance is against the United States also, but contrary to general opinion, not so much as in the case of wages. Norway and Sweden show the lowest, each man costing only between 22 and 24 cents per day. It will, we think, excite surprise to find that Germany and Austria pay as much for the maintenance of their seamen as does England. Italy, we are sorry to note, is not included in these tables. Her merchant marine has not held its own of late years, but it is generally believed that both in wages and maintenance her seamen cost less than those of any other nation. If this is so, it has not enabled her to hold out against the competition of more expensive merchant services.

These tables are especially valuable for—strange as it may seem—what they do not show? They do not show that the cheapest merchant service in cost of seamen is the most successful or leads in the carrying trade of the world. Norway and Sweden, or Russia, or Germany ought apparently to be the leading maritime nation, for they can buy vessels in the cheapest markets, and have the advantage of the cheapest crews. But Great Britain, which pays much more than any of these nations for her seamen, does the most of the ocean carrying trade. This peculiarity in shipping economics is not singular, for when the United States was driving English shipping to the rear by successful competition, American seamen cost more for wages and maintenance than English. The difference in favor of the English was not then greatly feared by American ship-owners, and to other causes than this is attributable their loss of trade. Wages and maintenance are certainly most important factors in the ship-owning business, but it is evident from the history of the United States merchant marine and the success of England at present in the carrying trade that the greater cost in the items of American vessels over those of other people is no bar to the United States ship-owners becoming again leaders on the ocean.—N. Y. Maritime Register.
